

On behalf of TRTA and YRSEA, thank you for voting in the 2026 Texas Primary election on Tuesday, March 3, 2026. Nearly one in four registered voters in Texas cast a ballot in Tuesday’s primaries, a high-water mark for midterm elections in the state’s recent history, driven by electrifying momentum surrounding both parties’ races for U.S. Senate.

In all, nearly 4.5 million Texans voted across the Democratic and Republican primaries, according to unofficial numbers on the Texas Secretary of State’s Office as of 8 a.m. Thursday. The turnout was divided between 2.3 million ballots in the Democratic primary and nearly 2.2 million on the Republican side; it was the first time with higher Democratic turnout since 2020, when voters flocked to weigh in on the party’s open presidential primary.

The energy across both parties this year was clear from the start. In the first seven days of early voting, the state recorded more ballots cast than in any recent midterm or presidential election year. There are roughly 18.7 million registered voters in the state.

We have done a tremendous job getting the vote out, but we are not finished. We must see the job to the finish line. Then we begin working with some new faces as well as our proven friends of the past on our agenda.

El Paso County Voter Turnout for Primary

March 3, 2026	523,381 registered voters
Voter turnout	17.75%
Ballots cast	92,897

WHAT’S NEXT?

Primary Run Off Voting:

Early Voting Primary Voting	April 22-29, 2026
In Person Primary Voting	May 3, 2026

TEXAS Mid Term Elections

Early Voting	October 20-31, 2026
In Person Voting Date	November 4, 2026